Miss Aldrich Married.

A Washington dispatch says: A notable wedding occurred at old St. John's Church at 1 o'clock to-day. Miss Letta Aldrich, the bride, was escorted to the altar by her uncle, Senator Stewart of Nevada, and was received by the groom, Rounesville Weldman of Boise City, Idaho, and Dr. Douglas performed the ceremony. There were no bridesmaids. The bride wore a dainty traveling dress of silver gray cloth, and the panels and sides of the bodice were of gray silk, brocaded in a pattern of wild flowers. The sleeves were full and high, and the Grecian drapery that was the unusual feature of the dress was of the cloth and was fastened with pearl buckles. Miss Aldrich was well known in this city, where she was a great favorite with every body. Her husband is the editor of the Idaho Statesman at Boise City.

Was Represented.—"Did ye git an invite to the weddin' of Jim Fair's daughter, Mike?"
"No, but I helped buy the togs."
"The divil ye did. How was that?"
"Payin' assessments on Con. Virginia for three years. Faith, Tim, but I guess we was both represented."

"Bedad, an' so was Widdy O'Connor, who lived down by the Julia."
Did you pay the artist who illustrated that great poem, "Christmas Chimes," on your first page?
"Yes, sir. Sent him a check for $250." "Good. How much did you pay the engraver?" "I sent him $75." "Yes. Is there any money left?" "About seventeen cents." "Very well, send it to the man who wrote the poem.—Philadelphia Record.

A MONCOL FAKER.

He Paralyzes The Chinese Quarter.

There is in the city a traveling Chinese street doctor who juggles, orates and sells magic ointment. The man is a counterpart of some of the long haired traveling Pain Kings who ride about the country selling medicines whose magical qualities astound the thoughtless and hook the unsuspecting summer sucker.

Last evening the doctor appeared in Chinatown, and opened his lay out. He spread a cloth on the ground about four feet square, (no hall rent) and then opened his game.

He was a man of gigantic proportions and his legs were like pillars of the temple. He is said to be the strongest Chinaman living and has offered to fight any of his own race, in any known style. He weighs about 180 pounds and is in prime condition. He began by taking his stand on the cloth and offering $100 to any six men in the crowd who could take him off the cloth. No-body offered and he then took some steel bars and rolling up his trousers began beating his leg with the rods. He raised welts and bruises and blood began to flow. He then took a ball of magical ointment and rubbed it on his leg and went on with his lecture. In about ten minutes he rolled up his trousers and displayed his leg as well as ever with no blood or bruises.

Then he turned loose a number of Chinese jokes, and began unloading the ointment at the crowd at a dollar a box. A chinaman translated his jokes to the APPEAL reporter. They were about on a par with the American medicine joke which goes in the street with cake soap and corn plaster.

He said he once had a fight with a man and his head was knocked off. He applied the ointment and in two weeks he had a new head with new ideas and better sense, besides being able to speak several new languages.

He had ointment at $5 a pill, which would grow a new head on a man in twenty-four hours, and teach him to speak nine languages, or money refunded.

The crowd laughed uproariously and purchased some ointment, but all of the dollar kind.

He then said that if the President of the United States would cut off his head and apply some ointment he could sign the new Chinese treaty.

This made the crowd howl for several minutes. When the mob got weary of investing in ointment he announced that he would vary the programme by doing the "Great Lion Act."

He accordingly did it by getting down on his hands and knees and growling while he gnashed his front teeth and pawed the earth. He was uproariously applauded.

He then took a knife and fork and potato and began to juggle them in the air.

The knife was as sharp as a razor and presently the whirling potato fell against the edge of the knife while the two were in the air and peeled the rind off the spud in a spiral curl, while he caught the fork in his hand and the potato in falling was impaled on it.

It was as neat a piece of jugglery as the writer ever saw on a stage and even the whites applauded.

He then announced that he would show various styles of fighting in China and gave a sort of pugilistic burlesque which was looked at with open mouthed wonderment by the Chinese and hooted by the whites.

He then closed the show announcing that he would remain in town a week and show every night.

He took in about $100. When the reporter asked one of the bystanders why he had not purchased some ointment he replied: "Sucker he no bites this year."
